Market today: HNX Performs Poorly in Second consecutive closing day of HSX

(Quang Vo – Ext: 1517)

It is the second day that the HSX is suspended due to technical difficulties. Hence money is flowing into the HNX. However, today's inflows have been lower than Tuesday. In fact HNX performed well only in the first few minutes of the morning session, supported mainly by oil and gas stocks (PVB, PVS, PGS). The recent uptrend of global crude oil prices is certainly supportive for the sector. Banking stocks (SHB and ACB) did well. In the afternoon session selling pressure became stronger, dragging down most of the stocks. The HNX ended at 126.26 points (-0.05%), off from the peak of 127.9.

Total trading value was only VND1,064B, decreasing by 30% from Tuesday. We think that investors seem to be waiting for tomorrow with expectations that the HSX returns back to its normal operations.

World news update:

The World Economic Forum's annual meeting started Monday in Davos, Switzerland. So far:

- Global executives have warned of complacency by investors- meaning that maybe stock markets are not a 'buy'.
- India's Prime Minister Narendra Modi said that his country is "removing the red tape" as he attempts to attract more FDI.
- Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau confirmed a Trans-Pacific Trade Pact without the US. The 10 remaining members of the TPP have concluded a new agreement in Tokyo.
- Trump is scheduled to talk in Davos, the first for a US President since Bill Clinton in 2000.
- China has always been a big topic for the forum. Apparently this year is also the case.
