6PM CALL

Market today: Liquidity was Remarkable

(Thien Bui – Ext: 1321)

The indices had opposite performances during the morning and afternoon sessions. The indices were in the green in the morning, although there was not a significant number of stocks that rose today. Investors' view of the market became more negative after the break. Selling pressure increased from 2 pm until the end of the session. The VNIndex decreased by 3.24 points and closed at 712.94, while the HNIIndex decrease by 0.36 and fell below 90. The total volumes on the two exchanges reached up to VND5,744 billion, in which the HNX contributed VND1,046 billion. It has been over 4 years since the HNX's trading volume exceeded VND1,000 billion, which occurred on February 21, 2013. Another noticeable point regarding volume was FLC: more than 54 million shares of this company were traded through matching orders, accounting for more than 21% of the matched volume on the HSX.

Both indices reverted quickly in the afternoon. (1) In the HSX, 40% of the stocks closed at the lowest price and the average difference between high – low price of these stocks was 2.4%. (2) The high liquidity amid the downward movement is another concern. (3) The sudden and strong reversion of many shares also raised concerns on margin issues. The average daily trading value in recent months of 2017 has increased 30% compared to the entire year of 2016, which can indicate that margin lending might have also increased; hence there will be large margin pressure. (4) There aren't any significant pieces of information that can create such change in sentiment.

The unexpected rise of sellers definitely causes confusion and doubts for investors and makes them more hesitant to join or remain in the market. Therefore, today has shown many signals of a correction of the market in general and for the VNIndex in specific. This is especially worth noting since this is the fourth time this year that the VNIndex has failed to break a resistance level of 720 pts.
