Market today: Selective Inflows

(Quang Vo – Ext: 1517)

Supported by the outperformance of banking stocks, the VN-Index rallied by 0.36% to 778.32. It is worth to note that the capital flow did not limited in a few banking stocks and blue chips as we can see a dominance of gainers in all indices including the VN-30, the VN-Mid, and the VN-Sml. The capital, however, flew selectively to seemingly attractive sectors only like banking, brokerage and O&G stocks. Therefore, picking stocks basing on industry outlook is advisable at the moment.

For foreign investors, they did not buy strongly like what they did yesterday as total net buying value was around only VND5bn. Still, they had net bought for thirteen consecutive sessions, and a total of over VND9,000 bn YTD, which is a 9-year high. The Vietnam market seems to be a good opportunity for foreign investors. We have some comments on this topic in the Analyst Pin-board curriculum.

Overall, signals from the market today were positive. However, the low liquidity continued to be the main source of concerns. We believe buyers need more time to accept new high base of prices.

Recommendations:

Indexes recovered quickly after just one session of correction. The liquidity remained high. The up channels of the two indexes are still solid. Trader should hold the stocks longer for higher targets.
