Market today: Liquidity Unexpectedly Falls

(Thien Bui – Ext: 1321)

Last Friday recovery did not last very long. The VNIndex struggled right at the beginning of this week. In the early session, the VNIndex lost more than 4 pts due to SAB and ROS. Though many VN30 stocks were responsible for such drop, SAB (-6%) and ROS going to the floor were the two major decliners affecting the index. Then the index became more stable. In the end, it closed down 1.55 pts. On the other hand, the HNXIndex gained 0.82 pt thanks to ACB. The share has increased 7% in the three recent sessions and it successfully broke out VND30,000/share.

Liquidity slumped today, mostly in the HSX. The order-matching traded value in the HSX decreased 17% to VND2,778 billion, the lowest value since August 23.

The sudden downfall of today's liquidity is a result of weak demand. Buyers stayed alert after watching the early morning drop. It is an unexpected situation but yet a big problem. There are two reasons why we think so. Firstly, there is not much significant news on the market at this moment. Secondly, market participants do not see clearly the leading sectors. Except for the noticeable drop in liquidity, today's market did not show any abnormal signal. We expect Q3 2017 earnings results to be a catalyst for the market to become lively again.

Technical Analysis Recommendation

VN-Index went down while HNX-Index kept moving up. Trading volumes increased slightly. The number of gainers exceeded the number of losers. Correction maybe coming and traders should take profit partly and then covered at lower prices.
