Market today: All That Glitters is Not Gold

(Thien Bui - Ext: 1321)

Both indices moved forward for the second day. The VNIndex closed above 675, exactly at 676.47 pts (+2.32 points). Meanwhile, the HNIndex added 0.17 points to yesterday's close. The market's trading volume increased very slightly by 2.5%, from yesterday's 134.6 million shares to 138 million shares today. However, trading value surged by 8.9% to a record VND2,204 billion. HPG and ROS were the most common stocks traded today in terms of value.

Foreigners turned into strong buyers in the HSX while remaining sellers in the HNX. They net bought VND100.8 billion worth of shares in the HSX and net sold VND6.5 billion in the HNX. Although the net value increased significantly compared to yesterday, the participation of foreigners is still quite ample, less than 10%.

"All That Glitters is Not Gold"

*Event-driven investors have been placing their bets for 2 days. The final results of the US President election will only come in by tomorrow at noon (Hanoi time), and it appears that the chance is equal for both candidates. It seems like the media and market player's reactions are supporting Clinton. Some AI systems on the other hand predict that Mr. Trump will become the next President. Parts of this event are quite similar to what happened a few days prior to the UK referendum in June, when preliminary polls, statistical results, and others signals in FX markets supported "stay" and then everything went the opposite way after only 2 hours in the morning of June 24th. Investors tend to have self-serving bias when betting on an event. Hence, for today's conclusion, we would like to use a common saying "All that glitters is not gold". To those investors who have yet decided, there is still time for decisions as the reaction to an event is only temporary while the underlying fundamentals are contemporary factors that mainly drive markets in the long-term.

Recommendations:

The two indexes kept recovering but were not as strong as previous session. The market is now quite balance and changes may come soon when the new President of the US is announced. Traders should wait for more signals before having further actions.
