Stay calm in a rollercoaster market

Short-term markets' trends could be revealed in at least 2 more days ahead. Markets slipped slightly with diminishing trading volumes. VNIndex lost 0.39% while HNIIndex dropped 0.4%. However, we could observe a little bit improvement in overall sentiment, which is evidently shown as fewer investors agreed to sell their stocks at lower prices (volumes dropped by 25% compared to those of 2 previous days). Also, VNIndex did manage to recover in the morning as it could reach the intraday highest level of 563 pts (0.54% higher than last Friday closed price). Such technical recovery did not stand a single chance on last week sale-off days; hence, it could be viewed as a bright spot for current harsh time.

However, stocks bought in 07/01 and 08/01 will be available for sales tomorrow and the day after tomorrow. Therefore, we think short-term trend (trend within 2 weeks) would be created after those sessions. If those two sessions do not witness high-selling pressure (extraordinary liquidity and deep drop in the index), market will high likely see the turnover point or at least the outstanding bearish trend will change to side-away channel price.

Besides, VNIndex is approaching the strong supporting level, 555 pts so scenario of market's plunge is considered to hardly happen. Since 2014, VNIndex has broken this level for just 5 times but after falling below that level, it then quickly rallied, and even formed the new bullish trend. Therefore, if VNIndex breaks through 555 pts due to sudden events, investors can consider bottom-fishing actions at large capital stocks for short-term trading, such as: VIC, BVH, VCB, VNM, FPT,....
