Market today: “Light at The end of The Tunnel”

(Son Tran – son.tt@vdsc.com.vn)

It was ‘fortunate’ that the US and its coalition partners attacked Syria on Saturday so that we avoided a “blood bath” that could have happened if it took place during a trading day. The quick airstrike could even be “a blessing in disguise” for the market as it temporarily removed all the worries about a complete war in the Middle Eastern country. Despite all that, while the global stock market positively reacted to the news, the Index today lost 0.75% to 1,148. The index lost quite a bit in the early session before it fluctuated and eventually entered the in positive territory in the afternoon session. Banking stocks (CTG, ACB, MBB and EIB) were the main gainers along with some blue chips like SAB, SSI, PNJ and MSN. However, the Index did not stay in the green for long, selling pressure came from VNM, VCB, BID and HPG and things fell apart.

In general, we believe that this correction is ending and investors can start to accumulate stocks from now on. Additionally, the AGM session of banks is close and results could be an important catalyst for the market.

Technical Analyst Recommendation

Indexes continued going down. Trading volumes reduced remarkably showing that the buying forces were weak. The short-term downtrend may last longer and indexes may go down to lower supports. Traders should increase the proportion of cash in the portfolio.
