"Low Liquidity – A Main Source of Concerns"

6PM CALL

Market today: Low Liquidity – A Main Source of Concerns

(Quang Vo – Ext: 1517)

The market's rally today was not convincing as the liquidity decreased deeply. Total matching trading value was only VND3,000 billion, which was significantly lower than the average of above VND4,000 billion in May. Low liquidity appeared in all large, middle and small cap groups. Considering the VN-Index's fall of 8 points in Tuesday's session with total matching trading value of VND4,700 billion, the rally today is nothing but a "technical rebound".

In the event the liquidity continues to decline, the current level of above 740 will not commensurate with the present capital in the market. We recommend that investors should reduce the proportion of speculating stocks, especially ones nearly reaching their "margin ceiling" to protect gains since May.

According to HSBC's Weekly Treasury Report, SBV only needed to offer VND2,175 trillion to banks via the Open market over last week. Considering that there was around VND4,774 trillion falling due on this channel over the same period, the central bank essentially withdrew around VND2,569 trillion from the banking system. Considering the decline in liquidity during last several sessions, we think this news from the Open market has some relation with brokers' margin trading policy as brokers use a part of borrowings from banking system to fulfil the needs for margin trading activity. Most notably, some speculating stocks has significantly declined since Tuesday's session. Overall, we believe that brokers are tightening their margin trading policy.

Recommendations:

Indexes recovered on low volumes. It might be a technical recovery and it is still early to talk about the reversal. Traders consider reduce the proportion of stock and wait for a few sessions.
