Market today: Market Hesitation is Evident

(Hieu Nguyen - Ext: 1514)

After its initial rally, the market went back and forth for the rest of the day. The VN-30 was up 0.53%, but the decrease of VNMID and VNSML, together with the absence of VNM, has limited the increase of the VN-Index. The VN-Index climbed only 0.18% to 674.26 pts, while the HNX-Index also rose 0.26% to 81.12 pts. Mineral penny stocks continued their rally for the second day in a row. After the withdrawal of 400,000 shares of Vaneck ETF (equivalent to $5.5 million) yesterday, foreigners continued to net sell VND121 billion on the HSX (of which VND93 billion belongs to VNM). However, they net bought around VND10 billion on the HNX.

The market movement somewhat reflects the hesitation of the majority of the market at this moment. As market confidence appears to be low, and foreign money in the short term seems to be pulling out of emerging markets after Trump’s victory, investors should be more cautious in their transactions. Since November the 8th, $187 million and $61.5 million have been withdrawn from the stock markets of Indonesia and Philippines, respectively. During the same period, the Jakarta Composite Index(Indonesia) and PSE Index (Philippines) dropped 7.2% and 6.2%, respectively, while the VN-Index only fell by 0.3%.

Meanwhile, the 14th National Assembly has started its first Q&A session. Today’s discussed issues included the causes of and measures to deal with failed or delayed projects, the fight against fake and low-quality fertilizer, Ca Na steel project, and the recent environmental incidents.

Recommendations:

Both VN-Index and HNX-Index increased slightly on moderate volumes. VN-Index is still in a correction while HNX-Index is in a downtrend. Reversal signal has not appeared and trader should maintain a portfolio which is balanced between cash and stock.
