“Large Caps Continue to Change Roles”

6PM CALL

Market today: Large Caps Continue to Change Roles

(Quang Vo – Ext: 1517)

It is easy to find that large-cap stocks alternatively pushed the VNIndex (793.55, +0.16%) up in recent sessions. Among yesterday's best performers (including VCB, GAS, VIC, and VNM) only GAS ended above its flat line. Instead, SAB, VPD, and HPG were the main supporters for the index to rally. It is also worthy to note that large-cap stocks were dominating. As for the VN30, only 7 gainers could offset losses caused by other 19 losers. On the other hand, with much negative market breath (95 gainers vs. 167 losers) compared with yesterday's session, the VNIndex successfully closed in the green.

Despite narrow market breadth, oil and gas shares continued to be in the spotlight as most stocks outperformed the market after the industry has received positive news from the two biggest oil producers, OPEC and Russia. They intend to prolong further production cuts if the glut persists. The current agreement will end in March 2018, and perhaps a cut-off deal with output of more than 1.2 million barrels a day will help the market reach the equilibrium soon.

The VNIndex has consistently increased since August 23rd and on pace to achieve the 795-797 levels. Investors has not seen any major correction phase. The quite weak liquidity, coupled with narrow breadth, make us believe that inflow has been gradually weaker. That said, the dependence of the VNIndex on a few large caps indicate that there are many stocks staying in the attractive price zone after the sell-off in August. Investors can find our recommendation on specific opportunities in our Investment Strategy September 2017 report published today.

Technical Analysis Recommendation

Indexes went up slightly. The trading volume remained quite low. The current uptrend is still valid but the lack of liquidity shows that correction may come soon. Traders consider taking profit partly.
