“Blue Chips Led the Market”

6PM CALL

Market today: Blue Chips Led the Market

(Quang Vo – Ext: 1517)

Although the market liquidity only had a small improvement (+6%) and the number of losers outweighed winners (142 vs 130), the VN-Index still closed in the positive territory thanks to strong support from blue-chip stocks. Of which, the banking sector had the most significant contribution to the overall gain. The HNX also enjoyed a successful session as closing above the 100-level, which is the first time since 2011.

The inflow towards blue chips is usual as these stocks now are benefiting from positive news. HPG is a typical example as the market expects an optimistic outlook for the Dung Quat project. Furthermore, the stock's low P/E level is also a motivation for investors. We believe investors are highly interested in the stock at the moment, considering people paying up to VND10,000 for the right to buy HPG at VND20,000/share, along with strong demand from foreign investors (as they bought VND80bn during today's session)

Overall, the market indices seem to stay in the uptrend, provided that capitals continue to flow into large-cap stocks. We think the fall in market liquidity may not be a source of concerns now. Maybe the sellers are waiting for higher prices.
